"Peek-a-boo! I see you!"

A fun game between mother and baby, with the intention of building connection. A baby learns that they are seen by their mother. And if you've had the pleasure of playing this before, you've seen firsthand the joy that spreads across baby's face.

But... what does it really mean to be seen?

Deep healing and connection occur when a person feels seen. The heart and soul begin to beat with hope. The promise of hope, once held in the eyes of a child, is renewed in the adult who has been thirsting for such love. Unconditional love.

Each of us, without exception, need this love in our lives. Anchored in love, filled with hope, each of us can then move throughout our community with intention and purpose.

Sometimes as children we are told lies that become beliefs that are deeply damaging.

Unfortunately, not all children experience this kind of love. Deeply damaging beliefs, fortified by lies we are told, can take root in childhood and grow in adulthood. We see this with the women we serve at The Margaret Home.

At The Margaret Home, a young mother (and her child) can finally hear the words their souls have longed for: "You are worthy. You are loved."

Peek-a-boo—this game takes two! When the community sees her members and when those members feel seen, a connection is made. A connected community is a healthy community.

At The Margaret Home, we create pathways for connection, where families see one another through eyes of love. Thank you for helping us build this community. We couldn't do this work without you.

Who have you 'seen' today?

Sincerely,
Paula Belemjian
